Challenges Executives Face

Low Earnings

Many delivery executives struggle with insufficient earnings that fail to meet their daily expenses, making it difficult for them to sustain their livelihoods in a competitive environment.

No Career Growth

A majority of delivery executives perceive a stagnation in their career paths, with limited opportunities for advancement or professional development within the logistics industry.

High Costs

The maintenance and operational costs of their vehicles significantly impact delivery executives, often leading to a financial burden that diminishes their overall income and job satisfaction.

Limited Support

Many delivery executives feel they operate in isolation, lacking the necessary support from their companies, which can lead to stress and a sense of disconnect from their work.

Minimal Incentives

Executives find that the lack of incentives for outstanding performance discourages motivation and engagement, leading to lower job satisfaction and retention within the delivery sector.
